Explore the history and significance of Victoria Memorial in Kolkata with these 10 lines about Victoria memorial. Learn about its architectural beauty, cultural importance, and role as a museum dedicated to British colonial history.

Have you ever wondered why the Victoria Memorial is one of the most iconic landmarks in India? Located in Kolkata, it stands as a grand reminder of India's colonial past and its connection to British rule. Built in honour of Queen Victoria after her death in 1901, this majestic monument is more than just a piece of architecture—it's a symbol of history and art combined.

Construction of the Victoria Memorial began in 1906 under the supervision of Lord Curzon, the Viceroy of India. The design was crafted by Sir William Emerson, blending Mughal and British architectural styles. Completed in 1921, it took 15 years to build this masterpiece. The memorial is made of white Makrana marble, the same material used for the Taj Mahal, giving it a timeless elegance.

Spread across 64 acres, the Victoria Memorial is surrounded by lush gardens designed by Lord Redesdale and Sir David Prain. Inside, it houses a museum that showcases rare artefacts, including paintings, manuscripts, and sculptures from the colonial era. This iconic structure is not only a symbol of history but also a popular tourist destination, attracting millions of visitors each year.
